About the Instructor:

Kim Carpenter is the Program Director for the Nebraska Coalition for Women's Treatment. Besides her coordination and administration duties, Kim also works with policy/standard development, peer review, public education/curriculum development and fund raising. Kim has experience developing training curriculum on women and substance abuse. She also helped coordinated statewide training sessions on women, trauma, and substance abuse.

Addiction is a complicated disease that presents a unique threat to women's health and lives. Treatment services for women are known to have a higher success rate when the needs and concerns for women are considered.

Objectives

- Understand the current trends of alcohol and drug use/misuse among female adolescents and adults
- Describe the general history of women and addiction
- Describe issues often specific to female adolescents and adults in treatment for substance use disorders
- Describe the health consequences of substance misuse for female adolescents and adults
- Describe the connections between violence, trauma and substance use disorders
- Describe the effects of substance use disorders on the ability to form healthy relationships and boundaries
- Explain the origins, symptoms and consequences of self-injury
- Explain the connections between body image, eating disorders and substance use disorders
